Mr. HUTCHINSON moved to recommit, in order to insert an amendment providing that the portion so leased shall never be used for the trul of an alleged fugitive slave.

Mr. C. S. FYENCEN spoke in favor of the amendment. He called attention to the scene in Boston when the Court House was surrounded with chains and filled with United States marines, and declared himself in favor of aggressive legislation on the subject of slavery to the utmost extent warranted by the constitution.

The motion to recommit was lost by 35 to 42, and the bill passed by 67 to 24.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. TOMINSON (dem.) rose to a question of privilege. He stated there was at present in session a special committee, and one which was driving through the New York city railroads. As a party in the interest he desired to be present at the meeting of that committee, but also to be present on the floor during the stated. There were but few democrat's here, and he felt the more anxious on that account to be present—at least, to hold up his hands against such acts as he believed must be regarded as the acts of speculators. He could could not be in both places at once; and he desired to know whether the special committees are not bound to rise when the House meets, and attend its sessions?

The Syraker realled, thathe had no power to order their altendance that he knew of; and desired to know if the gentleman from New York wished to make any motion?

Mr. TOMINSON—I move, then, a call of the House. I do this not to embarrars, but in order to compel the attendance of the committees here.

Mr. TOMINSON then withere whis motion for a call of the house, and moved the speaker be requested to notify the committees that the bouse is in session.

After some delay Mr. TOSINSON again rose, and stated be had beard from an officer of the house, that he nad notified the committee to attend, but that no notice was taken by them of his doing so. He (Tominson) therefore moved a call of the house.

The motion was lost.

A motion by Mr. Durres, to allow an appeal from the decision proposed by the commission, was lost by 32 to 38. The bill was then ordered to a third reading.
